Introduction

This report has been designed to facilitate accountability in Burma, now and in the future. It is common knowledge in the world community, and an omnipresent fact in Burma, that the ruling junta’s army, the Tatmadaw, constantly commits acts of a cruel and -- according to international standards -- criminal nature, against civilians. Such acts occur with particular frequency and ferocity in contested areas where the Tatmadaw suspects rebel activity or potential support. Those areas are often areas where the population is predominantly ethnic-minority. The pattern of human rights abuse has been well-documented for years, by monitors from Burma and from international organizations. This report will focus on a particular aspect of that documentation, listing incidents of human rights abuse with attribution of the Tatmadaw units and/or personnel reported to have committed them. Perhaps in the future such attribution will lead to retribution, in the form of moral censure or war-crimes tribunals; if so, it will be an important change from the present, when Tatmadaw commanders and troops are getting off scot-free from any punishment for their misdeeds.

The list of Incidents in this report was assembled from index cards, each containing a summary of what happened when a particular Tatmadaw battalion encountered civilians it considered suspicious or inferior or simply in the way. Some cards refer to single victims, others to large groups of entire villages. The stack of hundreds of cards, multi-colored for sorting them by region, stands three inches tall. Looking at it, one might wish the cards to be pinned to a wall, to see them all at once, a democracy wall, a memorial wall. One might wish them to be made into squares of cloth and stitched into a quilt, a memorial quilt, a quilt to symbolically warm and remember those who have suffered so much pain at the hands of the Tatmadaw. Instead, they have been typed into the list of Incidents in this report.

A recent television documentary about the current genocide of the Marsh-Arabs in southern Iraq showed a human rights office with dozens of photo books containing page after page of victim pictures. Such a quantity of documentation exists for Burma, too. But it is not enough to know the names, and even faces, of victims. The identity of those who commit the acts must be known, revealed, and remembered, as well. Sometimes, when a military force has a tight, claw-like grip on a nation, there is talk of their being amnestied, forgiven, if they will only let go. In some Latin American countries which have regained democracy, this has been the case. In Brazil, where military human rights violators went untried, as the price paid for their stepping away from power, their names were published in a book which was a huge national best-seller. It was one way to hold them accountable, to make sure that their crimes were not forgotten, so people would know who they were dealing with. Even during the criminal period, such information is useful. Foreign businessmen and government representatives who become involved with military figures in a dictatorship should know what units they command, and what those units do in the field; and if they don't care, the public and media may. Those proposing settlements and amnesties should be able to tell a ruling military regime that the crimes and criminals are known, and that the penalty for not ceding power may be an end-game more Romanian than Czechoslovakian, a videotaped firing squad and mob warfare, rather than a "velvet revolution."

The raw material from which this report was extracted, reams of documentation on human rights violations in Burma during 1992 and 1993, was most impressive. This qualitative information, based on first-person interviews with objective questioning techniques, provides a detailed picture of what goes on in remote and isolated areas of Burma. Compiled by groups often lacking in money, communications equipment, and other resources, such documentation gives a voice to those who would otherwise be kept voiceless. Various formats and structures are used to present such research, including newsletter articles, standardized forms, special reports, and first-person narrative accounts. For the most part the presentation is carefully done, although one international organization reported the same incident twice, apparently confused by variations of spelling the victims' names. In recent years, reports have become more and more detailed, making this report possible. Specifying Tatmadaw units/personnel has become much more common in documentation, although it continues to occur only in a small percentage of the overall documentation. In many cases, the victims and witnesses simply may not know the identity of the government soldiers involved; and in other cases it still may be too dangerous for them to reveal it.

Much of the information in this report comes from the Karen Human Rights Group, a relatively new organization which provides a steady flow of reports from the Karen State and other frontier areas (including Mon and Karenni). The KHRG's detailed, clearly presented research is the finest human rights monitoring from Burma, and certainly on a par with that of any international human rights organization. Operating with extremely limited funds, this organization of indigenous activists and concerned foreign staff has mastered the science of human rights research, and is of vital importance for Burma's people of all ethnic groups.

This report takes mainly qualitative data (people's own stories about what happened to them) and boils it down to quantitative data (a summary of events). Of course, it can be further processed to a list of how many acts of torture, rape, murder, etc. occurred in given areas at particular times, under which battalion or commander. In changing the format of information, sometimes new insights can be gained. For instance, for a somewhat jaded reader of human rights documentation, when a new report is received, it is the "different" types of abuse which catch the attention: a new form of torture, perhaps; or a victim's particularly expressive way of telling a story. But in assembling all the information in a more quantitative format, patterns emerge. One such example is the level of extortion of villagers by Tatmadaw units. The less blood-soaked crimes like confiscation of livestock may go relatively unnoticed in reports; but when looked at in the battalion listings, it becomes rather obvious that much of the Tatmadaw has a commercial interest in plundering rural areas on a regular, constant basis. This in turn, drains the farmers of the food and trade sources they need for their very survival.

Other such patterns include the growth of "free-fire zones" during a period of supposed Tatmadaw "cease-fires"; the severe vulnerability to abuse in areas of "counterinsurgency" where there has actually been little to no rebel activity; the destruction of the political/social/economic basis of rural society through systematic Tatmadaw abuse; and the inevitability of famine conditions due to crop confiscation and forced relocation. The artificial creation of starvation conditions in Burma may soon stand alongside famine created by Stalin in the Ukraine, Pol Pot in Cambodia, Mengistu in Ethiopia, and present conditions in Sudan. It is quite possible that Burma's SLORC junta will soon be requesting international relief aid for the victims of its own deliberate policies -- aid which may end up diverted to Tatmadaw purposes, as has so often been the case in Burma. Like the Irish Potato Famine, Burma's rural disaster may force higher and higher levels of emigration; and in conjunction with the now rampant AIDS epidemic, may send the demographics of Burma (not an overpopulated country) plunging downward as this century ends.
This report is meant to serve as a beginning element of an accountability data-base, so that Tatmadaw units and personnel can be monitored, the abuses committed recorded and cross-referenced constantly. As such crimes have already been documented in 1994, there will have to be a follow-up report to this one, and it is obvious that computer files should be used to keep this information in a form that can be accessed and updated. Naturally, reports and documentation alone cannot declare an officer or other soldier guilty. The SLORC's army must be afforded the fair trials they have denied everyone else (whether it is a war-crimes tribunal for Division 99, held with the accused in absentia by an indigenous peoples' group or UN body, under present conditions; or a post liberation process). This report is only the preliminary dossier of evidence gathered so far. It is most probable that more, rather than less, evidence will be found in further investigations.

The title of this report comes from a November 1993 Karen Human Rights Group report, "Incidents Reported from Karen Villages", in which a witness described events including the rape and torture of members of the Karen Women's Organization. The witness reported that a Sgt. Ba Kyi, of Infantry Regiment 60 was involved; and mentioned another instance of abuse (which was not included in this report as it did not occur in 1992-93): "Everyone in our area knows about this Sgt. Ba Kyi. He has raped so many women that he has become notorious. The worst time was in 1991 in ...Kyauk Kyi town. A 7 year old girl child went around selling vegetables, and in the evening she didn't come home. Her parents went round everywhere asking and looking for her, and eventually they found her where she'd been raped by Ba Kyi, then just thrown into a swamp full of lilies. When they found her she was still alive but couldn't even walk. They took her to the hospital and she survived for a while, but later she died." In Asia the lotus is considered a symbol of spiritual purity, a thing of beauty rising out of fetid mud. The strength and courage of Burma's multi-ethnic people flower too, out of years of oppression by a depraved military. By daring to tell their stories, the victims and witnesses defy Burma's monstrous regime, they transcend the mud, and they triumph.
The Tatmadaw

Burma's army, the Tatmadaw, has become larger and better equipped in recent years. Troop strength has grown from an estimated 180,000 before the 1988 suppression of the democracy uprising, to approximately 350,000. In January 1994, UPI correspondent Denholm Barnetson quoted a diplomatic source in Rangoon about the Tatmadaw: "They hope to have troops in all the 340 townships in Burma to rapidly take control if necessary." Tatmadaw political strategy has long segmented Burma into "white" areas under their control; "black" areas under rebel control; and contested "gray" or "brown" areas. Increasingly, the "black" areas have been shrinking, while the Tatmadaw concentrates its power on the contested areas, relocating rural populations suspected of sympathizing with rebel forces or dissident political protest. While the Tatmadaw fought only sporadically, with no major offensives launched in '92-'93, it kept busy with its brand of "counterinsurgency" directed at civilian, particularly ethnic minority, areas. Formerly an all-volunteer force (offering impoverished Burmese youths a hope of participation in the power structure), the Tatmadaw was reported to be expanding with the aid of some involuntary conscription into its ranks.

The Tatmadaw is organized with a regional command structure [including Western, headquarteredin Akyab; Northwestern, hq in Mandalay; Northern, hq in Myitkyina; Northeastern, hq in Lashio; Eastern, hq in Taunggyi; Southeastern, hq in Moulmein; Southwestern, hq in Bassein; and Rangoon]. In 1992-93 there were ten light infantry divisions, each commanding several battalions; a total of 223 infantry battalions, 3 armored battalions, 7 artillery battalions, and one anti-aircraft artillery battalion. The Tatmadaw sometimes creates additional battalions to station in "trouble spots", and divisions are sometimes shifted to new areas. Some commanders are shifted often, while others remain in the same location for long periods of time. Burma's annual direct military expenditures were well over 1,250,000,000 US dollars each year during 1992 and 1993. An official 1990 estimate of the percentage of Burma's annual budget spent on direct military ("defense") purposes was 22.3%, one of the very highest such percentages in the world.
Formerly armed mainly through a joint-venture with the German company, Fritz Werner (a relationship said to persist), the Tatmadaw since 1988 has massively increased its firepower. Arms shipments are reported to have arrived from companies in Yugoslavia, Pakistan, Belgium, Portugal, Poland, and Singapore. The primary arms merchant to the SLORC junta has been mainland China. Bertil Lintner, in the Far Eastern Economic Review (December 16, 1993), wrote that a military analyst stated that "the total value of Chinese arms delivered or on order is believed to be in excess of US$1.2 billion." This materiel includes fighter jets and ground attack aircraft for Burma's Air Force, as well as "fast attack" patrol boats for its Navy. Chinese trainers and other advisors have been sent to Burma along with the hardware.

Burma is widely reported to possess chemical weapons, and reports of their use by the Air Force or Army, in battle or against civilians, have come from Kachin, Mon, Karen, and other areas. During the 1980s, the herbicide 2,4-D, an Agent Orange ingredient supplied to Burma's government by the US for anti-narcotics purposes, was used to terrorize ethnic minority civilians. There have been unverified allegations of the SLORC's possible use of biological weapons, as well, most recently in connection with an epidemic in a Karen area in 1993.

As well as occupation by regular Tatmadaw battalions, many areas of Burma endure active forces of the Na Sa Ka (a "Border Administrative Body"; in Arakan under supervision of SLORC intelligence strongman Lt. Gen. Khin Nyunt); the Military Intelligence Service (pervasive throughout urban and rural Burma; Khin Nyunt's primary surveillance/enforcement apparatus); the Ion Htein ("riot police" also used as a paramilitary force in frontier areas); and local militias operating under Tatmadaw command.

There is a steady flow of deserters from the Tatmadaw to frontier areas, and officers ranking as high as colonel have defected to resistance forces; but in recent years there has been no large-scale mutiny of Tatmadaw units. Still, at least one assassination and/or coup d'etat plot by mid-level officers was reportedly discovered and suppressed during the time period covered in this report. Today, the Tatmadaw appears to maintain its cohesiveness through relentless indoctrination, and a pyramid scheme of fear and corruption emanating from its éminence grise, Gen. Ne Win, and his SLORC junta, ever downward through the ranks.
Method and Scope

The information in this report was compiled in February 1994, from sources documenting instances of human rights abuse in Burma during 1992 and 1993. Sources up to January 1994 were used. Hundreds of individual documents were searched for specific references to units or personnel of the Burmese Army (Tatmadaw) involved in incidents of abuse. Each of those specific references was summarized on an index card, and then the cards were collated according to Tatmadaw unit and/or personnel. The cards were cross-referenced by date and location of incident in order to, as much as possible, avoid duplicate listings.

The documentation to which this report refers comes from a variety of sources, including international human rights groups, Burma monitoring organizations, and political groups (both armed and unarmed). The groups all have conducted their own investigations in Burma. No documentation was used from press sources (radio, television, newspapers, magazines). All the documentation used was in the English language; future data bases or reports could refer to documentation in Burmese, Thai, Japanese, Chinese, and Indo-European languages. The documentation used in this report covered, at least in part, all areas of Burma's frontiers where troops are stationed, as well as some central Burma regions where there are active troops. Another interesting investigation might involve the role of particular Tatmadaw units and personnel in human rights violations in central/urban Burma, including specific units of the Military Intelligence Service.

As this report is limited to specific unit/personnel references, it represents a very small percentage of the body of documentation on human rights abuse in Burma during 1992-93 (which is just a two year period out of decades of such abuse). The types of abuse described are consistent with those reported by reputable international human rights investigators who have done first-hand Burma research. Most of the documentation has been produced with objective interviewing techniques. While many of the sources are utterly unobjective, being involved in Burma's political resistance movement, their human rights documentation has the ring of accuracy rather than propaganda. One group which is associated with a narcotics warlord's army, has actually issued reports documenting human rights violations by that very army, a level of even-handedness rarely seen in localized human rights monitors.
Tatmadaw human rights violations are an ongoing situation; reports on early 1994 incidents are already being received as this report is prepared. Therefore, all the documentation used in this report is public, published information; no informal or covert documentation is cited, as such sources might have inadvertently posed a danger to victims, witnesses, or monitors in Burma. In the documentation used, some names of places and victims have been changed or deleted, for the same security reasons. The basic locations (township, province, state or division of Burma, etc.) are the same as in the original documents. Several variations in the spelling of names of people and places are left as recorded in the original documents (for instance, "Bilin" and "Belin", "Pa-an" and "Pa'an"). "Regiment" and "battalion" are often used interchangeably in translation of Burmese; in this report, the term used in the original documents cited is used, and where only the number was recorded, "battalion" is used. In some cases, the documentation may have mis-identified a division as a battalion, or vice versa. This report aims to stick as closely as possible in a briefly summarized form, to the information contained in the original documents.

A Note on the Format

Each of the Incidents entries uses the same format:
- The date when the Incident reportedly occurred.
- The reported ethnicity of the victim(s) [if not reported, the abbreviation "ue" for "unspecified ethnicity" is used]; the reported location of Incident.
- The source [organization/document] and date of source.
- In the case of Incidents listed by military unit, if names of personnel, or smaller units such as columns or companies, were reported, they are listed in bold type ("names").
- Incidents are listed in order of battalion/regiment or division number; other military forces follow; then listings in which only personnel were specified.

lines from "In Times of War" a sonnet sequence by W.H. Auden

But suddenly the earth was full: he was not wanted.
And he became the shabby and demented,
And took to drink to screw his nerves to murder;
Or sat in offices and stole,
And spoke approvingly of Law and Order,
And hated life with all his soul.

Here war is simple like a monument:
A telephone is speaking to a man;
Flags on a map assert that troops were sent;
A boy brings milk in bowls. There is a plan

For living men in terror of their lives,
Who thirst at nine who were to thirst at noon,
And can be lost and are, and miss their wives,
And, unlike an idea, can die too soon.

But ideas can be true although men die,
And we can watch a thousand faces
Made active by one line:
And maps can really point to places
Where life is evil now:
Nanking; Dachau.

They are and suffer; that is all they do:
A bandage hides the place where each is living,
His knowledge of the world restricted to
The treatment that the instruments are giving.

And lie apart like epochs from each other
--Truth in their sense is how much they can bear;
It is not talk like ours, but groans they smother--
And are remote as plants; we stand elsewhere.

They carry terror with them like a purse,
And flinch from the horizon like a gun;
And all the rivers and the railways run
Away from Neighborhood as from a curse.

They cling and huddle in the new disaster
Like children sent to school, and cry in turn;
For Space has rules they cannot hope to learn,
Time speaks a language they will never master.

We live here. We lie in the Present’s unopened
Sorrow; its limits are what we are.
The prisoner ought never to pardon his cell.

Can future ages ever escape so far,
Yet feel derived from everything that happened,
Even from us, that even this was well?

And only
The brass bands throb in the parks foretell
Some future reign of happiness and peace.

We learn to pity and rebel.

A 26 year old woman was taken for porter duty, with her baby; porters had minimal rations, men were hit with knives. Troops forced villagers to get vegetables for them, mend roads, serve as porters 3 to 4 times a month, or more. Many villages are deserted.

1993, ongoing; Karens; Pa'an District

KHRC: "SLORC's '93 Offensive" July 10 '93, p 15 -16.

A man taken as porter, tortured with cuts on thigh, penis; and beaten. A woman raped by troops near her house. Villager killed in retaliation for Karen rebel activity in area. Troops looted and destroyed "a big house." A man found hiding in a bunker beaten to death. 28 buffalos shot as retaliation. Troops shooting at people and animals. Livestock confiscated. A villager beaten to death. Beatings, interrogation, shooting at running people, are common.

1993, ongoing; Karens; Pa'an Township

Troops demanded ten porters from a village of just 15 houses; also demanded labor, and cut bamboo. Villages must send a "go-between" to interpret, report on rebel activity, do errands, clean the compound at army camp. A village's "go-between" was sexually harassed by army camp commander, who then forced the village to relocate. The villagers couldn't grow rice in the new place, so they moved back; Division 99 made them move again, after one month, and they only had five days in which to move; troops threatened to shoot everyone. Some villagers were arrested. A man was falsely accused of being a Karen rebel, and beaten. The village was looted. Soldiers shoot at people running. A woman was shot in the arm. In retaliation for Karen rebels wounding a soldier, troops shot one villager and beat another to death (Ple Wai and Bo Po approx. names of the two villagers). A 17 year old girl was captured by troops, slapped, harassed; her stepfather came to help her and troops put him in a uniform, accused him of being a Karen rebel, beat and killed him.
1993 - ongoing; Karens; Papun District
Torture common, including ears cut off, slices made with knives and salt put in the wounds, water forcibly poured in mouths. Porters used to walk in front because of landmines. Porters have minimal rations, are left behind or "kicked off the mountainside" if they can't carry loads. Villagers taken for slave labor, making trenches, barricades, doing construction and gathering firewood for the army; their possessions taken by soldiers.
A one-day pass to leave the village costs 1 kyat. People are shot if found hiding in forest. Three people from a village killed for working in their fields. Carts used by the army, livestock taken, troops make threats to kill villagers.

1993, ongoing; Karens; Papun District
People confined to village without 1 kyat day pass. Common torture includes skin slashed and salt/chili put in (witness saw it done "to seven men one time"); also starvation as torture, and an eye gouged out. Village headmen beaten. Porters taken -- minimal rations, women forced to march in front, porters with heavy loads in front as human minesweepers. Soldiers rape village women, including two women who are witness's friends. Troops extort money; once fired mortar shell at killed and killed two cows, when headman didn't go to camp to report on rebels and bring money. Constant looting of livestock, coconut trees (chopped down), household goods. Forced labor, cutting bamboo fences, dig bunkers; meat demanded in lieu of labor.

What to Do About it Now:

Send a letter to the SLORC. Tell them that the human rights violations committed by the Tatmadaw are being carefully monitored, so that those who commit abuse will be held strictly accountable for their actions; so officers in charge had better cease the abuse of human rights in Burma immediately. Write to: Lt. General Khin Nyunt, Secretary-1, State Law and Order Restoration Council, Ministry of Defense, Signal Pagoda Road, Yangon, Union of Myanmar.

Foreign companies help keep the SLORC in the business of oppressing Burma. Write to elected officials in your own country and ask them to ban corporations from investments with the SLORC regime.

Multinational oil companies are involved in a gas pipeline scheme which is a current danger to the survival of indigenous people and wildlife in the rainforests of southern Burma. Write to the companies involved and tell them to end their joint-ventures with the SLORC. Texaco Inc. (CEO, Alfred DeCrane Jr.) 2000 Westchester Ave., White Plains NY 10605. Total (CEO, M. Serge Tshuruk) 24 Cours Michelet, 92800 Puteaux, France. Unocal Corp. (CEO, Roger Beach) 1201 West 5th St., PO Box 7600, Los Angeles CA 90051, USA. Nippon Oil (CEO, Yasuoki Takeuchi) 1-3-12 Nishi-Shimbashi, Minato-ku, Tokyo 105, Japan. Premier Consolidated Oilfields (CEO, Charles Jamieson) 23 Lower Belgrave St., London SW1W ONR, UK.

The company that makes Pepsi-Cola also does business in Burma; for information about the Pepsi boycott, contact: QIRG, 1125 Colonel By Drive, 326 UniCentre, Ottawa ON, K1S 5B6, Canada.

China is the SLORC's main weapons supplier; write and demand that they end the flow of arms to Burma. Mr. Qian Qichen, Foreign Affairs Minister, Ministry of Foreign Affairs, 225 Chaoyangmennei Dajie, Beijing, People's Republic of China.

Think globally, act locally. Find creative, dramatic ways to protest foreign investment and defy the SLORC!
